MASTER'S PROGRAM COMMUNICATION AND SOCIETY IN IBERO-AMERICA

HOW ARE COMMUNICATION AND SOCIETY IN IBERO-AMERICA RELATED? HOW DOES CULTURE STAND UP TO POWER IN IBERO-AMERICA? HOW IS PUBLIC OPINION IN IBERO-AMERICA BUILT? HOW DO LANGUAGES SHAPE IDENTITIES?

The master's program Communication and Society in Ibero-America at the Heidelberg Center for Ibero-American Studies (HCIAS) is aimed at students interested in questions related to communication and society in Ibero-America. It provides you with interdisciplinary perspectives and area-specific knowledge on issues that are especially relevant for Ibero-American societies. You will strengthen your methodological, language, and communication skills and orient them toward a cross-cultural academic profile. The HCIAS master's degree will provide you access to challenging fields of activity in research as well as outside academia.

INTERDISCIPLINARY

From different angles of the humanities and the social sciences, you approach social and communication dynamics

- in political and economic spaces of the Ibero-American macro-region;
- with regard to Ibero-American cultures, peoples, and their natural environments;
- related to social, linguistic, and socio-cognitive phenomena and the information society in Ibero-America.

You will gain interdisciplinary competencies in qualitative and quantitative methods and be able to apply them in the description, analysis, and comprehension of communication and its social dimensions in Ibero-America.
